

Jackson Heights Scenes Shown In Art Exhibit

"Where People Live," a series of paintings of Jackson Heights street scenes by Maurice Sievan, will be shown in a one-man show at Contemporary Arts, 38 West 57th street, Manhattan, Feb. 10 to 28. Sievan, who lives at 2145 77th street, Jackson Heights, is a native of Brooklyn. He studied at Pratt Institute, the National Academy, Cooper Union, and L'Hote in Paris.

Several months ago he visited in Jackson Heights, and he was so impressed by what he called "paintable" material on the streets that he moved into that section and made the paintings that form the center of his show. The show will be open from 10 A. M. to 6 P. M. every day, except Sundays, when the hours will be 2:30 to 5:30. Monday nights the show will be open from 8:30 to 11:30 P. M.

FEBRUARY 22, 1941

CUE

VOLUME 10 • NO. 8

SIEVAN, MAURICE—Paints paved streets at many corners, not meant to be recognizable. Has his own fun stirring color round and musing things up generally. Once in a while a well-organized picture takes place at a dead-end street, or way out in the country. Contemporary Arts, 38 W. 57th. Thru Mar. 1.

CONTEMPORARY ARTS 38 W. 57th St., N. Y.

"WHERE PEOPLE LIVE"

PAINTINGS BY

MAURICE SIEVAN

Through February 28th

BROOKLYN EAGLE, THURSDAY, FEB. 20, 1941

Local Scenes in One-Man Art Show

"Where People Live" is the name which Maurice Sievan has given his current one-man exhibit, because the paintings are just that—street scenes in the vicinity of his home at 21-45 77th St., Jackson Heights.

The exhibit began Feb. 10 and is open through Feb. 28 at Contemporary Arts, 38 W. 57th St., Manhattan. Mr. Sievan's art career really began when he was 11 years old and a student in Public School 33 in Brooklyn, where his teacher, a Miss Loughman, considered his talent so important that she enrolled him in the Saturday morning children's class at Pratt Institute at her own expense.

Too young to enlist for the World War, he enrolled with the Merchant Marine and kept officers and crew entertained with his sketches. Subsequently he studied at the National Academy, Cooper Union and L'Hote in Paris. Back in Brooklyn, he made several paintings in the neighborhood of the Erie Basin. A visit to a friend in Queens about six months ago so impressed him with the wealth of paintable material there that he moved to Jackson Heights and proceeded to do most of the paintings in his present exhibit.